Children need to play outside to appreciate nature.
If a child grows up never walking in the woods, digging in soil, seeing animals in their habitat, playing in a stream, or staring at the endless horizon, they may never really understand what there is to be lost. The future of our planet depends on our children; they need to learn to appreciate it. - Harvard Health Publishing

Time spent outside builds executive function, skills that help us plan, prioritize, troubleshoot, negotiate, and multitask; crucial for our success. Creativity falls in here, too, and using our imagination to problem-solve and entertain ourselves. These are skills that must be learned and practiced — and to do this, children need unstructured time. They need time alone and with other children, and to be allowed (perhaps forced) to make up their own games, figure things out, and amuse themselves. Being outside gives them opportunities to practice these important life skills. - Harvard Health Publishing
