NATURAL RESOURCES AND WILDLIFE

EASTERN WHIP-POOR-WILL Have huge mouths they use to scoop up 2 inch long insects out of the air. They lay their eggs directly on the forest floor but are so well camouflaged they are able to survive.

WOODCOCK Mostly nocturnal. Their bill has nerve endings that can detect earthworm movement beneath the soil.

EASTERN HOGNOSE SNAKE When frightened, hognose snakes make a loud hiss, coil, and flatten their heads into two or three times their normal body width. If the predator does not retreat, the snake often rolls over on its back and plays dead.

PASQUE FLOWER One of the first prairie flowers to bloom in the spring. Their flower stalks are covered with silky hairs that protect the plant from spring frosts and late snowfall.

BURR OAK One of the most common trees in Minnesota. At maturity, their bark is very thick and deeply ridged feeling sometimes corky. This helps protect the tree from fire.
